B, Infectious diseases and veterinary public health}, year={2001}, volume={48 4}, pages={ 241-58 } }This review covers a historical view and etiology of oedematous skin disease which affects buffalo in Egypt, the microbiology of Corynebacterium pseudotuberculosis causing the disease: its virulence; clinical signs; mechanism of pathogenesis; histopathology; mode of transmission; immunological aspects; treatment and control. It is concluded that C. pseudotuberculosis serotype II is the main cause of OSD and exotoxin phospholipase D and its lipid contents of the cell wall are the major causes of... Corynebacterium pseudotuberculosis: microbiology, biochemical properties, pathogenesis and molecular studies of virulence.The current molecular strategies for the study of virulence in C. pseudotuberculosis are examined, including the latest research on the identification of novel virulence factors and genes, which will help to better understand the biology of this microorganism.View 3 excerpts, cites backgroundSHOWING 1-10 OF 27 REFERENCESORT BYRelevanceMost Influenced PapersRecencyAction of Corynebacterium ovis exotoxin on endothelial cells of blood vesselsH. Carne, E. O. OnonBiology, MedicineNature1978Experimental evidence is reported that C. ovis toxin is a phospholipase D which attacks the sphingomyelin of endothelial cells of blood vessels which causes marked leakage of plasma from small blood vessels at the site of infection which floods lymphatic spaces and increases the risk of bacteria being carried by lymphatic drainage from the sites of infection to regional lymph nodes. Viana MVC, Figueiredo H, Ramos R, Guimarães LC, Pereira FL, Dorella FA, Selim SAK, Salaheldean M, Silva A, Wattam AR, Azevedo V. Viana MVC, et al. Eighteen Corynebacterium pseudotuberculosis were isolated from 30 specimens [9 biopsies from closed skin lesions and 21 exudate specimens from open lesions] collected from 27 buffalos with symptoms of skin infection. C. pseudotuberculosis was isolated in pure cultures from 6 out of 9 biopsies and in mixed cultures from 12 out of 21 exudate specimens. The majority of isolates were of biotype II [15 isolates], whereas only 3 isolates were of biotype I. The pattern of isolation of both biotypes I and II from biopsies and exudate specimens was similar. Both biotypes I and II differed in their course of pathogenicity in G. pigs. C. pseudotuberculosis was not isolated from blood sucking and biting flies [236 files] existed on the infected animals and in their premises. This might rule out the role of vectors in transmission of infection. In-vitro antibiotic sensitivity testing revealed that C. pseudotuberculosis isolates were most sensitive to penicillin 89%, amoxicillin 89%, erythromycin 83%, chloramphenicol 78% and ampicillin 78%. The histological examination of skin biopsies from the diseased buffalos showed inflammatory reaction due to the bacterial infection
